

From daily note to operating picture: connecting the work around the record

ResiNotes starts with the Daily Logbook, then connects the surrounding home activity that gives each daily record its context.

The daily record is still the anchor

A daily note matters because it records what actually happened. But in a children's home, the day is shaped by handover, rota cover, visits, medication, incidents, missing episodes, checks, manager follow-up and evidence tasks.

ResiNotes presents more of that operating picture so visitors can see how the record sits inside the work of the home.

What the platform brings together

The platform brings My Home, Daily Operations, ResiRota, Missing, Incidents, Hashtag Management and Medication/eMAR alongside the Daily Logbook and young person areas.

The aim is not to make the product look bigger for the sake of it. The aim is to show how care recording, daily operations, safe staffing and evidence review connect.

Why it matters

When the home is busy, staff need routes into the job they are trying to do. A manager might be checking safe staffing, a practitioner might be recording an update, and another member of staff might be following up a visitor, medication issue or rolled task.

Putting those routes around the daily record makes the platform easier to understand and easier to review.
